Beautiful Afternoon Tea.

The attractive home of Mrs. Morris Sass on F street, southwest, was the scene of a tea of artistic and unusual appointments held at five o'clock yesterday afternoon, complimenting Miss Pauline Gladney of Chicago, whose marriage to Mr. William Tyler of Gainesville will be solemnized this evening and Miss Gaynor Roberts of Dallas, the house guest of Miss Madeline Colbert, also honoring Miss Orlean Scott, the charming house guest of Miss Helen Sayre.

The guests were welcomed by Miss Ellen Dickson and Miss Helen Sayre, who introduced Miss Scott, Miss Roberts, Mrs. Sass and Miss Gladney.

The home was a veritable bower of flowers and ferns. Trailings of honeysuckle and daisies hung from the eave-trellises and were festooned over the openings. A beautiful profusion of shasta, garden daisies, and corcopsis was used in the reception hall and living room, combined with quantities of roses, sweet peas and nasturtiums, in beautiful hanging baskets.

After the arrival of the guests, a most mysterious silence suddenly fell over the room. The flower garden was lighted and a faint flutter and humming became audible. Very slowly a pink and white tissue cloud descended seemingly from the canopy of flowers, as Miss Ellen Dickson sang sweetly of cupid, "Gladney" and the fairy of wishes and good fortune. As the gossamer cloud descended, it became evident that it contained life. It burst, and the daintiest wish-fairy imaginable, in white chiffon gown, stepped out. Stars falling good fortune, happiness and success glistened on her track, a golden diadem graced her head, as she shyly approached Miss Gladney and presented Cupid's parcel of telegram wishes which the guests had sent. These were opened and read by the bride-elect. The little fairy, Leona Nichols, the younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Nichols, vanished as sweetly as she entered.

Mrs. N. C. Wood, Mrs. E. F. Graham and Miss Dickson invited to the dining room. This bower was even more elegant than the rooms previously noted. Vines trailed from the four eave-trellises over the corners of the table, ending with baskets of salted nuts. A basket of roses hung from the center over a low bowl of nasturtiums, and sweet peas. A heart floral shaped piece of roses graced one side of the table, while the bride's cake graced the attractive piece for the other decoration.

Mrs. Sayre and Mrs. Byers assisted the guests in serving themselves with a most bountiful and delicious lunch, which was served from the tables and buffet.

After luncheon the guests were invited to try their chance in the drawing from Cupid's heart. Streamers drawn in the large floral heart and the guests drew their fortunes, which were tiny bags of rice. Miss Roberts' package contained an exquisite lace ticoat. Miss Scott received a sterling corsage bouquet pin. Miss Gladney drew a dainty message which in rhyme directed her to a most beautiful and useful "Mistress Mary Garden Basket."

The bride's cake was cut for the good fortune symbols, the dime, the thimble, and the ring.

The house party was composed of a number of the neighbors of Mrs. Sass, who assisted her in receiving and in tending many delightful attentions. The afternoon was one of genuine pleasure and hospitality, such as Mrs. Sass is noted for, and for which her many friends unanimously declare her excellency.

There were about seventy-five guests, who called from 5 to 7.
